SafeStep

AI-Powered Safety Planning for Domestic Violence Survivors

MSIS 522 | March 2026

Anushka Chougule

Li Huai

Miranda Grato

Rithvik Ravi

SCAN ME

Leaving is the most dangerous moment.

1 in 4

women in the US experience domestic violence

1 in 9

men in the US experience domestic violence

#1 Risk

moment is planning to leave — when abusers retaliate

Existing tools — hotlines, shelter directories, generic checklists — are not discreet, not personalized, and not safe on a monitored device.

THE SOLUTION

SafeStep — A lifeline in your pocket, hidden in plain sight.

Decoy Interface

Users choose a disguise — recipe app, notes app, budget tracker. One triple-tap reveals SafeStep.

AI Safety Plan

Claude API generates a personalized, prioritized exit checklist based on a 5-question intake.

Resource Lookup

Google Places API surfaces nearby shelters, legal aid, and therapists by ZIP code.

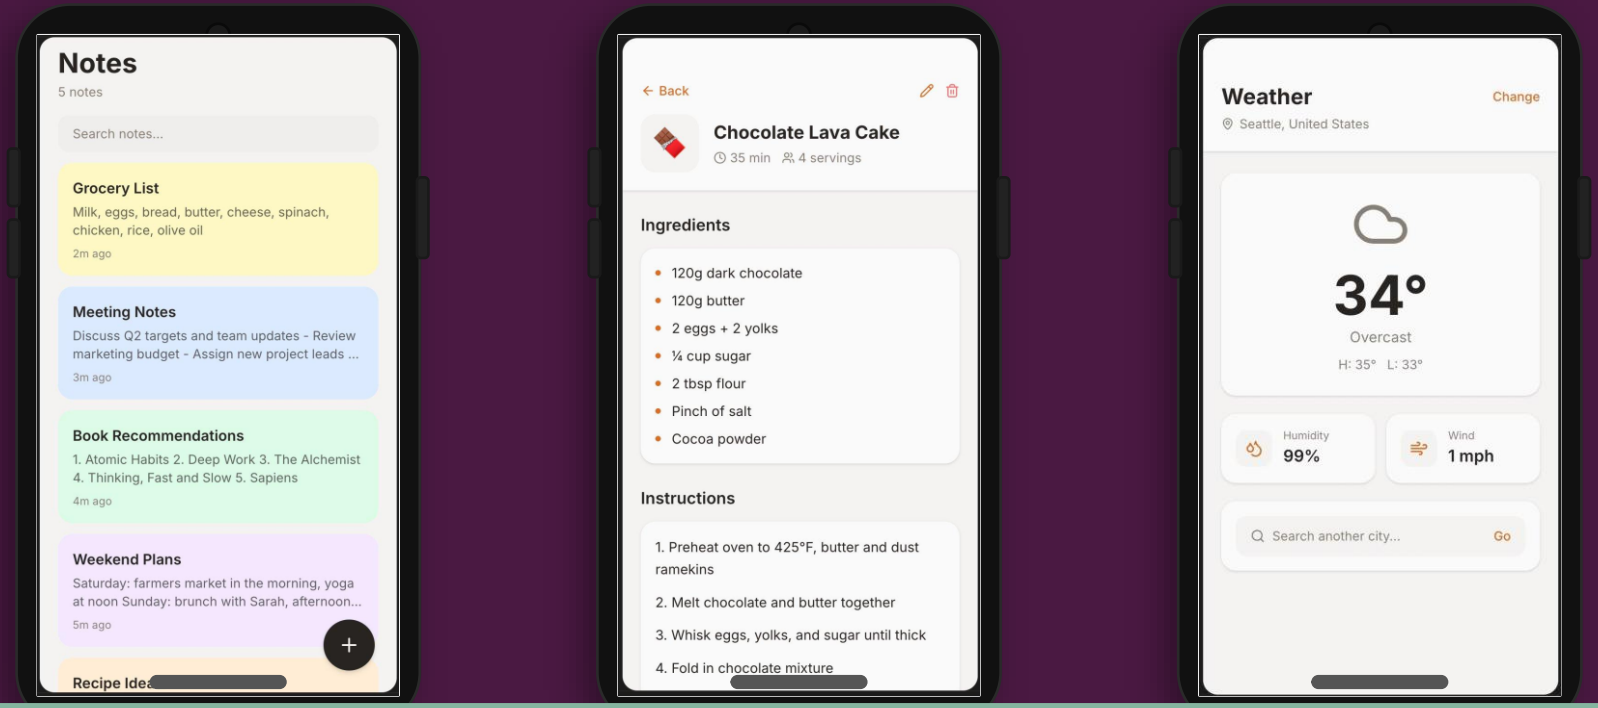
Quick Exit

One tap returns to the decoy screen and clears visible session state instantly.

THE DECOY

Hidden in Plain Sight

Users choose their own disguise — SafeStep hides behind a normal-looking app on their home screen.



Triple-tap anywhere to reveal SafeStep

Where SafeStep Goes Next

Future Work

- Multilingual support — Spanish, Mandarin, and more
- Advocate review mode — trained counselors verify AI-generated plans
- Native iOS / Android app with biometric unlock
- Anonymized outcome tracking to improve AI recommendations

Ethics & Limitations

- Stalkerware — app-level protection has limits; users advised to use trusted devices
- Not a legal or crisis counseling service — always routes to professionals
- AI responses must be trauma-informed; system prompt reviewed by DV advocates
- Anthropic high-risk compliance: AI disclosure, human review, flagging mechanism

Q & A

SafeStep

This chat is powered by AI. For immediate danger, call 911.

How Should I start for item 2?

Item 2 is about asking your trusted contact to hold copies of important documents for you — things like your ID, birth certificates, Social Security cards, medical records, or anything that proves who you and your children are. Having these copies somewhere safe outside your home means you won't have to search for them in a crisis.
You might start by telling your trusted contact something simple and honest: "I'm dealing with some difficult things right now, and I'd feel safer if you could keep copies of some important documents for me. Would you be willing to help?" You don't have to share all the details about what's happening — just enough so they understand why this matters to you. If you don't have the originals yet (which is common when finances are controlled), you could ask them to help you contact a local domestic violence organization, since those groups often help people get replacement documents like birth certificates and IDs. Your trusted contact could also store that small emergency bag mentioned in item 6, so you're not trying to gather things in a rush later.
What feels most manageable to you as a first step — reaching out to your trusted contact, or looking into what documents you might need?

Report

I'm scared of him coming home, what can I do right now?

Take a few slow breaths — you're thinking ahead, which shows good instinct. Right now, focus on what you can do in the next few minutes to feel a bit safer: make sure your phone is charged and with you, lock a door if you can, or move to a room where you have an exit. If you have a trusted contact nearby, you might text them just to know someone is aware of where you are.
Having the National DV Hotline number saved where only you can see it can help too — call or text 1-800-799-7233 anytime you need to talk through what's happening or think through your next steps. They're available 24/7 and can help you think clearly about your situation. In the meantime, is there a safe place in your home where you can be right now, or someone you trust who you could reach out to?

Report

Type a message...

Edit with Lovable